VOTERS of Weber County:-

JOSEPH B. BATES

For the past two years I have endeavored to protect the peace and security of our county through judicious, impartial and just enforcement of the law. While many of your young men have been given another chance in life through a reduction of the gravity of their offense when it was their first mishap, yet the state prison has received more prisoners convicted from Weber county than from any other in the state. During the next two years you will need experience in the county attorney's office more than you have needed it at any time in the past, and I pledge myself if elected to continue energy and efficiency in the conduct of the affairs of my office.

Range Depleted by Injudicious Grazing

Injudicious grazing has prevented great accomplishments in rearing and properly maintaining the forage crop of about 500,000 acres of range land in western states, according to a circular issued by A. W. Sampson, in charge of the Great Basin Experiment station. Approximately 119,000,000 acres of this land is within the national forests.

Many such factors, such as too heavy stocking, grazing, by the wrong class of stock, and unfavorable climatic conditions are responsible for the depletion of the range. Mr. Sampson says: "In general, however, range depletion is chargeable to three conditions: Premature grazing and the lack of uniform utilization of the forage crop; too frequent cropping and an almost entire disregard for the growth requirements of the vegetation and inability to control overgrazing and failure to correct it in its early stages."

"The article continues in part: 'If grazing types in the intermountain region are considered in a broad way for, let us say, south exposure, the approximate dates at which the range may be grazed are about as follows: 5000 feet and lower, April 15 to May 15; 6000 to 7000 feet, April 15 to May 15; 7000 to 8000 feet, May 15 to June 15; 8000 to 9000 feet, June 15 to July 15; 9000 feet and up, from about July 15 throughout the summer.'

In general, the cattle ranges are more seriously depleted than the sheep ranges, for the reason that cattle cannot conveniently be held on that portion of a range where the vegetation is insufficiently developed for grazing. In order properly to control cattle and, at the same time, afford reasonable protection necessary to rid the range of its overgrazing, and the cost of effective riding soon amounts to as much as the cost of a well-constructed fence.

Sugar-Beet Seed Price May Decline

Danger that the price of sugar beet seed will take a heavy drop when the buying period begins, unless the export trade takes care of some of the surplus seed, is felt in Washington, according to dispatches which reached Ogden today. The situation with respect to the sugar beet seed is set forth in the following statement from the department of agriculture.

"The total production of sugar beet seed used in the United States this year is estimated to be 6,770,000 pounds. Reports to the bureau of market prices the average yield per acre, 870 pounds on the 7750 acres harvested. This total is about 70,000 pounds greater than last year's record production.

Idaho produced one-third of this year's crop, or 2,250,000 pounds, followed by Colorado, with 1,415,000 pounds; Montana, 310,000; California, 300,000; Michigan, 215,000; Utah, 200,000; and in all other states, 1,000,000 pounds. The average yield per acre in California was 1200 pounds; Idaho 800 pounds; Michigan, 765 pounds and in all other important producing states about 900 pounds.

"Heavy importations of sugar beet seed during the year ended June 30, 1920, brought the apparent carry-over on July 1 of this year up to 22,500,000 pounds, compared with 12,000,000 on July 1, 1919. This carry-over, together with 3,500,727 pounds and 155,480 pounds imported during July and August, respectively, plus the estimated domestic production of 6,770,000 pounds, gives an apparent surplus supply in this country of approximately 32,500,000 pounds, to which should be added the quantity which may have been imported since September 1.

Independent of future imports the present supply, supplemented by a normal domestic production in 1921, should be sufficient for more than two years' planting requirements, allowing for a normal increase in the commercial sugar beet acreage.
